

memories

the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound just the wind in the trees and the laughter on the island saying clearly that that was it for the night
the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound the gratitude I felt as I understood that you don't need much more than the wind and a smile

of the memories you have only keep the ones that make you laugh and discard the few that don't really lighted your mood

the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound her eyes above the rim of the bath a little crazy in the full moon light
the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound the echo turning her sweet little purr into that of a full grown lioness of the memories you have...

the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound
the singing of a few thousand people mixed with the first few bars of my favorite band
the lights went out and all you could hear was that special sound the feeling I had back then forever engraved into my soul of the memories you have...